Mark E. Barker

Mark Barker has established a construction and commercial litigation practice with an emphasis on surety and fidelity law, construction law and business dispute resolution. He also has a busy commercial transaction practice representing financial institutions and Arizona small businesses.

Mark assists surety clients with a variety of issues including investigation and resolution of performance and payment bond claims, takeover and completion of public, tribal and private projects, principal financing and collateral arrangements, quia timet and indemnity actions, salvage and subrogation claims.

Mark's representation of financial institutions includes the preparation of loan documents and related agreements for real estate acquisition, development and construction financing. His work for financial institutions expanded from primarily assisting with new loan transactions to representation, arising out of the strained relationships between lenders and borrowers resulting from Arizona's economic woes.

Representation of financial institutions includes forbearance arrangements, loan modification, restructure or settlement agreements, note sales, sale transactions involving lender-owned real estate and the enforcement of lending transactions including non-judicial and judicial foreclosure proceedings.

Mark also represents Arizona small businesses and financial institutions. He provides clients assistance with the formation of business entities, preparation of operating agreements or shareholder agreements, asset purchase and sale transactions, business reorganizations through merger or share exchange, real property acquisition and sale and other financial transactions.

Mark joined the firm in 1984 and became a partner in 1992.

Mark is a graduate of the University of Arizona.
